

cold piles against windows our white teapot vibrates the swan spout steams... we talk about saving our spring lilies from beetles boring through their silks we'll bow our bodies low pick them red and crawling off the pouches envision carmines lemon yellows open to yellow anthers brightening this winter room we strain strong tea from steeped silver