

Semblance

The dog I love is turning into my father an old man I have to humor to get up do his business he even growls like my father and gives me the eye I never know what kind of mood I'll find when he wakes from a nap and with stiff joints makes his way to the kitchen when it rains he turns from the door whining peckish when it snows he refuses to wear a coat when people visit he remembers his old manners and sometimes joins us on the couch and falls asleep snoring like my father who never had much use for my conversation and showed his teeth when I displeased him collared as he was and made to heel by his betters after guests leave he stares at his food sometimes I ignore him sometimes I plunge my hands into the smelly stuff and he eats from my palm